A top House Republican said Thursday that Congress should reconvene before Nov. 2 to vote on extending the Bush tax cuts.

Republican Conference Chair Mike Pence told the WOWO talk radio station in Fort Wayne, Ind. that he's hoping members will get a chance to show where they stand on the cuts.

"I'm still hoping against hope that Congress may be called back into session before this election and take an up or down vote on extending all the current tax rates. I just thought it was unconscionable that the Democrat majority in Congress adjourned to go home to campaign to keep their jobs without doing anything to protect the jobs of millions of Americans who are threatened by either higher taxes on themselves or on their employers," he said. "I think
