

Seventy years ago today, what started as a beautiful Sunday morning in Hawaii, ended as a 'Day of Infamy' as Pearl Harbor and Americans came under attack.

Days later, President Franklin Delano Roosevelt would use that term in describing the attacks of December 7, 1941.

And while our nation still grieves for those who sacrificed it all, we recognize that from the tragedy of Pearl Harbor came a galvanized nation that rose up to confront and overcome the evils of totalitarianism and fascism.

I am eternally grateful for our military men and women who bravely fought for freedom. We must never forget their service and sacrifice, and we honor and remember them today.
